The Fenian Campaign on the Border.

The despatches which we publish to-day from various points along the line of the Fenian attack upon the British possessions in Canada give a fair account of the progress of that enterprise, which began by the grabbing up of the "Commander-in-Chief" by a United States Marshal, even in the midst of his own army, with all his troops about him. A very curious and absurd incident it was, upon which it is unnecessary to make any other comment than that it is quite a novelty in military history. That the army should dissolve and vanish into thin air, leaving its guns, ammunition, and even its blankets, in the streets of Franklin to be gobbled up by the gaudy of that village, as the despatches state, is not to be wondered at under these circumstances. The news from Malone, which recites that a large body of Fenians, fifteen hundred strong, had taken a different point of departure and crossed the frontier and were advancing on Huntington, a town in Canada, is not strengthened by any information received up to the present writing. Great events, however, are predicted to come off to-day, to a dead certainty.

It is probably a matter not worth much consideration whether the Fenian movements end in an ignominious failure or not. The fact that such adventures are liable at any time to be renewed, and thus keep the British provinces in perpetual anxiety; to compel the colonial government, at vast expense, to start out every now and then its local militia to meet a Fenian army from this side of the border, and to transport its regular troops from point to point, is sufficient reason, among a hundred others, why the British government should desire to assist in the annexation of Canada to the United States. We have no reason to suppose that the Canadians themselves are opposed to such a measure. If, for instance, a transfer of Canada were offered in payment of the Alabama claims we hardly think that our government would refuse it; nor is it likely that the British government would demur to such an amicable arrangement.

It is pretty evident that whenever the Irish element in our population reaches boiling point and has money enough to transport its panoplied warriors over the border—guns, blankets and all the paraphernalia necessary for a good Irish row—that we cannot calculate upon any permanent peace for Canada. The easiest way, therefore, to settle the whole vexatious question is for British statesmen, who must understand this question as well as we do, to favor the annexation of Canada to the United States upon the best arrangements which can be made between the two governments. This will end very speedily all raids and troubles either from Fenians or any other source.

The tone of the British press on this Fenian movement is noticeable for the endorsement of the action of General Grant. No doubt the English press and government would be delighted to see the United States authorities at Washington acting as a police force to protect their Canadian territory. It would be an easy and economical way of doing it. But this cannot last always. If the British government does not see the wisdom of settling the Alabama claims we cannot answer for the ebullition of ill-feeling towards England, which goes very far to build up a sympathy in the breasts of the American people for all such movements as this one now agitating the public mind, be it ever so contemptible in its management.

The Isthmus of Darien Exploration.

While the news from the Gulf of San Blas, which we publish this morning, does not inform us of the discovery of a practicable route for a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, it is, on the whole, favorable. Notwithstanding the continuous rains, the work of exploring and surveying had gone on without intermission, although the progress of the expedition was much impeded by the unfavorable weather. Twelve miles inland, over a summit level of not exceeding one hundred and twelve feet, had been examined, the principal route lying along the course of the Mandinga river. Explorations had also been made of the Niagua river, and a party under Lieutenant Hitchcock was exploring the Samundri, which is the left fork of the Mandinga, and which, with the Niagua, flows in the direction of the San José. This latter stream is a tributary of the Manoni, which flows into the Bayamo on the Pacific side. It now remains to be discovered how high the source of the San José is, to decide upon the practicability of a route for an interoceanic canal between San Blas and Chepo. Already the first signs of the mountains had been encountered, but they do not indicate that there is no low summit level along the entire route. Further explorations, which have doubtless been made by this time, were regarded as necessary before a final decision could be arrived at. Meanwhile it is satisfactory to know that the officers and men of the expedition have been working energetically and faithfully, and that, whether they discover a practicable route or not, the thorough survey they have made of the isthmus will be valuable to science.

A REVOLUTION IN COSTA RICA.—Our correspondence from Central America, published elsewhere this morning, gives the details of a successful revolution in Costa Rica. The whole affair was somewhat grotesque in its character. Probably in imitation of the famous trick played by the Greeks upon the Trojans, nine revolutionists hid themselves in carts containing grass, and which were driven into the barracks at San José. At a signal they emerged from their place of concealment, shot down all who opposed them, took possession, and soon after arrested President Jimenez. A new government was then installed, headed by Dr. Bruno Carranza, who will retain power until some other revolutionist deposes him. It is gratifying to know that "tyrants" were shot. Jimenez and all the prisoners were set at liberty, and at last accounts everything was going on well.

THE FIRST REPORTS and only specific details of the Fenian battle and its consequences, near Cook's Corners, St. Arnaud, Canada East, were from the special HERALD reporter on the ground. Having made our arrangements all
